ANOTHER BEE STORY.

Nick and Nancy had been so much interested in hearing of what the Queen Bee had said about life in the hive that they asked Duddy if he hadn't anything else to tell them about Queen Ree or of any of the honey

"We see so many bees around the flowers at this time of the year," said Nancy, "that it is fun to think of what they are doing and of what their special work is."

"Well," said Daddy, "if you think you'd like one more bee story, and if you think the friends you have would like to hear about the honey bees again, I will tell another hee story."

"Yes," said Nick, "do tell another bee story, Duddy. I take a chance that our friends will want to hear about the honey bees at this time, when as Nancy says, we see so many ground all the time."

"The drames or Mr. Been are help-less creatures, and don't even feed themselves. They go about on bright days, and when they meet the young queens with whom they mate, they do not take any interest in life beyond having found their mates. They don't live and work and play
